Permite su accesibilidad a los lugares más alejados. Con la energía eléctrica ayuda a la iluminación de las calles, y a que funcionen los aparatos eléctricos. Podemos comunicarnos con gente de alrededor del mundo. DESVENTAJAS:En la industria no satisface algunos usos calóricos que necesitan altas temperaturas. Cuando la energía eléctrica es transportada en plantas de carbón, libera subproductos que son tóxicos para el medio ambiente. Por obtener la energía eléctrica destruimos muchos hábitats naturales. Las personas que utilizan la electricidad de forma exagerada como fuente de energía no ayudan al medio ambiente. La energía eléctrica es tan fundamental hoy en día que si desapareciera sería un caos. . Symbols change meaning depending on the context, and they can occur from a variety of, sometimes distant sources - from mystical treatises to practical magic, from folklore to ritual performances. Näytä kokonaan... Among the most mysterious sources was alchemy - a semi-secret activity aimed at turning the evil metals into gold and silver, and in addition, to create life in the laboratory, than clearly bordered on heresy. Bosch's alchemy is endowed with negative, demonic properties and its attributes are often identified with symbols of lust: copulation is often depicted inside a glass flask or in water - a hint of alchemical compounds. Color transitions resemble sometimes different stages of the transformation of matter; jagged towers, hollow trees, fires are both symbols of hell and death and a hint of the fire of alchemists; an airtight vessel or a melting horn is also an emblem of black magic and the devil. Of all the sins of lust, perhaps, most symbolic designations, starting with cherries and other voluptuous fruits: grapes, pomegranate, strawberries, apples. It is easy to recognize sexual symbols: men are all pointy objects: horn, arrow, bagpipes, often hinting at unnatural sin; women - everything that absorbs: a circle, a bubble, a shell of a mollusk, a jug (also denoting the devil who jumps out of it during the coven), a crescent moon (hinting also at Islam, and therefore on heresy). it is also possible not to name a snake, although it is not found at Bosch very often. The owl is the messenger of the devil and at the same time heresy or symbol of wisdom. Toad, in alchemy denoting sulfur, is a symbol of the devil and death, like all dry Other common symbols: a ladder that denotes the path to cognition in alchemy or symbolizes sexual intercourse; An inverted funnel is an attribute of fraud or false wisdom. key (cognition or genitalia), often in form not intended for opening; severed leg, traditionally associated with mutilation or torture, and Bosch associated with heresy and magic. As for all sorts of evil spirits, then Bosch's fantasy knows no bounds. In his paintings Lucifer accepts myriads of guises: these are traditional devils with horns, wings and tail, insects, semi-human-semi-animals, creatures with a part of the body, turned into a symbolic object, anthropomorphic machines, freaks without a torso with one huge head on their feet, ascending to the ancient grotesque images. Often demons are depicted with musical instruments, mostly brass, which sometimes become part of their anatomy, turning into a nose-flute or nose-pipe. Finally, the mirror, traditionally a diabolical attribute associated with magical rituals, at Bosch becomes an instrument of temptation in life and ridicule after death. The life of this time is full of extremes: the horror before the Terrible Judgment and the torments of Hell was mixed with an unbridled thirst for pleasure; cruelty and gloom coexisted with gaie and good-naturedness. The retort of Northern Europe does not generate titans in the visual arts, such as Leonardo da Vinci, Raphael, Botticelli. In the Netherlands of the turn of the 14th and 15th centuries, there is no jubilant joy of being and believing in the great powers of a human creator who can match God. The thinking man of the autumn of the Middle Ages saw only that everything earthly is nearing death. Even the glorification of the sensual joys of being was connected with the acute feeling of their short-livedness. In this era, the smell of roses was mixed with the smell of blood. From such a kneading blood and rose Bosch creates his famous altar - Garden of earthly pleasures. We can only guess about the origins of his fantastic images. None of Bosch's works evoked as many interpretations as the Garden of Earthly Delights. The meaning of the image tried to explain from the point of view of astrology, alchemy (the central part is sometimes called Alchemical Garden), as well as with the help of proverbs and winged phrases. Some scholars have seen in the central picture an illustration to the famous medieval Roman of the Rose - a kind of bible of erotic culture of the time, where instead of the Garden of Eden the Garden of Love is sung, and all shades of human feelings and states are represented with the help of allegory. painting - a transparent sphere, up to half filled with water. From the water are the outlines of the land, over the shrouded misty shrouded earth swirling storm clouds. This panoramic view of nature experts consider as the beginning of the development of the genre of landscape, although the artist shows fantastic rocks and plants. But what Bosch wanted to portray, here the opinions of experts differ: either this is the Earth on the Third Day of Creation, or after the Flood, sent by God to humanity for sins. On the top left, above the deserted landscape, is a small figure of the Creator on the throne with a book in his hands. On the upper edge is an inscription from Psaltery: ... For He said, and it has become; He commanded, and he did, (Psalms, 32:9). According to modern researchers, Hieronymus Bosch creates a world of pure image, where there are no moral assessments and therefore it is impossible to talk about what the artist really means - whether the world of human sin, or heavenly kingdom. At the same time Bosch created an amazing panorama, enchanting harmony and at the same time a sense of sinfulness, although the artist puts all these temptings in the garment of the myth, depriving them of their sensual origin. Many naked men, women, fantastic animals and birds, magically scattered throughout the field triptych, collected in rhythmic groups. The orderliness of these groups, the clear writing of the smallest details, the schematics of movements, the impassive expressions of the faces turn the figures into some signs, a kind of letter of figurative language, in which the artist talks about the fundamental problems of the universe and the sense of human life. In the center of the composition is the source of life, from which God-made creatures are chosen on dry land. Fantastic landscape artist inhabits a lot of real, as well as unreal species of flora and fauna: here and three-headed bird, and winged fish, and Seahorse unicorn, and even a creature with a fish tail, reading a book. Bosch embodies the text of the Old Testament not by canon. Later, the Middle Ages reveals a strange contradiction between sharply expressed shyness and striking ease. Even in the image of the first people there is an erotic element: Adam looks with admiring amazement at the dulled Eve. Researchers paid attention to the fact that God holds Eve's hand, as at the marriage ceremony. The idea of pairing of all living things, laid down from the moment of creation, was embodied in the works of many artists. In Bosch animals and birds illustrate a very different feature, characteristic of all living creatures (and man too): the cat holds in the teeth of a mouse, birds devour frogs, and lions hunt for larger prey. Therefore, eating one living being by another is provided in the plan of the Creator himself. On the right fold of the triptych swallow and torment will no longer animals and frogs, and people. In the verses of Lorenzo The Duke of Medici, ruler of Florence of the Renaissance, calls for the enjoyment of life: Let everyone sing, play and dance! Let the heart burn with it! Down with fatigue! Down with sadness! Who wants to be cheerful - have fun today. Tomorrow is late. Even in Italy, the joy of being seems brief and transient. Northern Europe's motive for cheerful joy is alien at all. Polemizing with Italian humanists, Bosch shows that for all the brief joys of life people will pay eternal torment in Hell. Bosch says that after death no one will be spared and forgiveness of sins. The fire in the background of the board threatens to spread and destroy everything. If in the image of Ray Hieronymus Bosch shows normal, natural relationships, though not always humane, then in Hell - everything is upside down. The most innocuous creatures are turned into monsters, ordinary things, growing to monstrous sizes, become a tool of torture. A huge rabbit drags its prey - a man bleeding; one musician is crucified on the strings of the harp, the other is tied to the lute vulture. The place that paradise is assigned to the source of life, here is occupied by a rotten tree of death growing out of a frozen lake - or rather, it is a man-tree, watching the disintegration of his own shell. Bosch inexhaustible in his descriptions of punishments for various transgressions. Hell's music will be punished by those who listened to idle songs and melodies. Snakes will greet those who have not wholesomely embraced women, and the table at which gamblers played dice and cards, will turn into a trap. In this monstrous world reigns bird-headed monster, which swallows human bodies and, having passed them through his womb, tossed into a sewage pit, around which are carcasses for all sorts of sins. When compared to the board of the Seven Deadly Sins, where the image of Hell is signed, what sins are punished, you can guess why sinners carry punishment here. At the bottom left, the angry man is nailed by a monster to the board, just above the envious tormented by two dogs - pride looks in the mirror on the ass, the glutton spews the contents of the stomach, and the avid defecation coins. Medieval moralists called any kindness music of the flesh - and here Bosch numerous musical instruments torment human flesh, but not sounds. And the sin of laziness, apparently, symbolizes the sinner on the bottom right with paper on his knees, to whom the homunculus in a knight's helmet stretches out a pen and an inkwell. The images of terrible punishments to which sinners are subjected are not only the fruit of Bosch's fantasy. In medieval Europe there were a lot of devices for torture: hand saw, belt of humility, stork, repentance shirts, witch goats, pads, roasters, collars. The Iron Helmet screwed on his head, breaking the bones of the skull. In the Boots legs were clamped - the degree of compression depended on the severity of the sentence; in this shoe the convicts were supposed to walk around the city, warning of their approach with an iron bell. many naked young men and women greedily eat strawberries, cherries, grapes, enjoy the coolness in the ponds; they are surrounded by flowers, butterflies, beautiful and whimsical structures - four Castle of Vanity (or Trigon), filled with acrobats singing birds. The castles are made of plants, marble cliffs, beads of gold and precious stones, but evoke associations with the shell, claws and moustache of cancer, like the fountain in Paradise. Strange, coral, structures in the center of the composition, similar to those depicted on the left sash, researchers also consider astrological symbol of Cancer. Until very recently triptych dates back to 1504 or so, when the Sun and moon converged in the zodiac house of Cancer. According to the specified dating triptych was written between 1510 and 1515, but it does not change the astrological subtext of the work - in 1524 was expected an even more important event, predicted by astrologers - the parade of planets and the expected in this regard the new World Flood. But there are many interpretations about what it is. Just like most Dutch and then Dutch masters, Bosch's symbolism is very diverse, one common key to all his paintings is impossible to find. Symbols used by Bosch change meaning depending on the context, and they can occur from a variety of, sometimes distant sources - from mystical treatises to practical magic, from ritual performances to folklore. As an artist halfway from the Middle Ages to the Renaissance, Bosch is characterized by sanity, erotic symbolism, fascination with riddles, desire to translate into visual images puns and phraseological turns... Kiss of Life By Rocco Morabito, 1967 This photo shows two electricians Randall Champion and J D Thompson at the top of a power pole. They were doing preventive work when Champion touched one of the high-voltage lines. These are the lines that just buzz with electricity. Näytä kokonaan... More than 4,000 volts passed through champion's body, and an electric shock stopped his heart (even the electric chair used only 2000). His safety belts prevented him from falling, and Thompson, who was climbing behind the Champion, quickly tried to give him artificial breathing. He was unable to carry out normal resuscitation, given the circumstances, but continued to help Champion breathe until he felt a weak pulse. He then unravelled the victim, took him on the shoulder and went down with him. Thompson and another worker performed primary resuscitation on the ground, and by the time ambulance staff arrived, Champion was already relatively alive. He subsequently made a full recovery. For this photo, its author Rocco Morabito in 1968 received the Pulitzer Prize in the photo newsroom. Photography along with history has traveled the world, and is in the Washington Museum. The rescued Randall Champion then lived another thirty-five years, was electrocuted again, and died of his death in 2002. Page 7 !!! The editors of fashion magazines carried this photographer in their arms. With a team of models and stylists, he traveled the most exotic corners of the Earth. In 1951, Clarke signed an unprecedented contract allowing him to shoot for three publications at once - French, English and American Vogue. Among the most famous models of the time, Henry photographed the Duchess of Windsor, the Empress of Thailand and other equally famous people. Clark's photographs are about the high fashion, and the elegant women who wore it, hence the title of his book - L'Elegance de Annees Cinquante. Martina Frank specialized in portrait photography. This talented woman was a life partner of the legendary photographer Henri Cartier-Bresson. She was a member of Magnum Photos for 32 years and was the first woman to be accepted into this famous photo cartel. Näytä kokonaan... Martina Frank's interest in art dates back to her earliest childhood. Since her father was an amateur and collector, he often took her with him during visits to galleries and museums. And as soon as she was sent to the boarding house, Martina's mother almost every day sent her postcards of paintings and various works. From here she has a great interest in art history and a desire to become a curator. Martina Frank studied art history in Paris. But, preparing for the thesis, I realized that I had no special interest in writing and addressed her passion for photography in a timely manner. She is his career as a wonderful photographer, having worked as an assistant to many legendary masters. In 1980, Martina joined Magnum Photos. It happened only after 15 years of wonderful married life, and she did not want to be in the shadow of her husband, so she endowed her work with her own characteristic feature. Frank is well known for her style in documentary photography. She visited prominent places and documented the way of life of different people. The photographer used a 35mm Leica camera and always preferred shooting in black and white. Steve McCurry - Archive I have to admit that I am a street photographer who is looking for moments and situations, McCurry says, describing himself. Even one photo can be a triumph of observation, a whole story about loneliness, a reflection of people on a bright urban landscape. Nude models can be photographed anywhere, says Steve McCurry. These models are dressed, each of them has its own charm. They are purposeful and idealistic people. So I wanted to take a picture of them in a special place, and Rio was great for that purpose. Steve McCurry travels and takes pictures for almost forty years. I've known him for the last thirty. As an inventive traveller, very easy to communicate and the hardest-working creative person I know, Steve is a great photographer. He is always very observable and fully focused on the essence of things, on the disclosure of humanity in every work. One of these images- a photograph of Sharbat Gula, a green-eyed Afghan teenage girl he took in a refugee camp in 1984, became one of the most recognizable photographs in the history of photography. As Steve, he managed to find it 17 years later and take it again. At the age of 22, in search of a new one, he hitchhiked from his home in the U.S. through Mexico and Central America to Panama (I bought some lenses there). Even before his thirtieth birthday, he traveled through Yugoslavia and Bulgaria, alone down the Nile, and visited Uganda and Kenya; in the late 1970s for two years wandered around India and visited Nepal and Thailand. Disguised as an Afghan peasant, he made his way to Afghanistan. It's only in his twenties. He walked all the way along the mountains of roads, living at the expense of berries and sleeping in barracks. Ten months later, when Soviet troops entered Afghanistan, his photographs of the recalcitrant Afghan mujahideen were the first to be published in Europe and America. Visiting Afghanistan and working in Beirut, Baluchistan and on the Cambodian border, he gained the reputation of a military photographer. But that's not what I wanted. I wanted a free job, an opportunity to go where I wanted. many of his works are historical in nature. In his photographic chronicles, he simultaneously captured the customs, daily life and outfits of the now-lost world. I am proud of the choice of location, conditions and lighting when filming this project, Steve McCurry says of the creation of this Calendar Pirelli in Rio. The main task is to find the light, the right time of day, the right place, and then - to make it all appear as much as possible. Light is everything. 60 Steve McCurry - Archive Mel Ferrer with his coat buttoned up around his wife, actress Audrey Hepburn, a country road outside Paris, 1956.64mag.com Hans Gutmann/Frida Kahlo in the British Hospital, (Mexico City) 1951.64mag.com 1951.64mag.com energia electrica ventajās y desventajas. energia electrica ventajās y desventajas yahoo. que es la energia electrica ventajās y desventajas. como venezuela utiliza la energia electrica ventajās y desventajas. definicion de energia electrica ventajās y desventajas. generacion de energia electrica ventajās y desventajas. uso de la energia electrica ventajās y desventajas. fuente de energia electrica ventajās y desventajas
